Please join us for our November 21, 2013 forum. Our speaker will be Nick Weingarten, LCSW discussing Co-Occurring Mental Illness & Trauma: Impact on the Family. This Forum will focus on recent research that has found that over 60% of persons diagnosed with a mental illness also have a history of Trauma. For those persons with co-occurring substance abuse and mental illness the numbers go up to 85% with a history of Trauma. This combination of illnesses is very difficult to treat and often results in continuing demands, frustrations and emotional exhaustion for families who are struggling to support their loved ones. We will discuss how Trauma affects individuals, what new treatments are emerging that work and how families can benefit by becoming aware of how trauma affects them and how to manage that impact.

Florida
By Dorothy McClellan

Down in Florida where the tall palms grow, swaying in the warm wind, shutting out the snow. Down where the sun is bright as gold, far from the bitter biting cold. The tropical flowers bloom and bloom, they take away the dismal gloom. Birds of paradise are nesting there, clouds are few, the sky is clear. You can sleep peaceful and let the moon beam, dream a beautiful Florida dream. The ocean is blue-green, the beach has silver sand, caressing a warm sunny land. Come away with me and we will go, away from the cold and winter snow. We will take a car, we will take a plane, we will take a bus or overnight train. We will go to Florida and bask in the sun, we will dance all night and have some fun.

The Earth is Beautiful
By Cheryl Brenner

A big beautiful sun in the summer. A big moon, half moon, ¾ moon. This beautiful Earth, aren’t we special to share this wonderful place with millions of people. This country of ours is a free country we live in. We are free to just about anything. Cook inside, cook outside on a grill. Have a birthday party for young & old. Run around and be happy. Go swimming, go fishing. Just about anything you want to do, you can do.

Autumn
By Jess Tarlini

The air is crisp, the colors so grand, a plethora of red, yellow and orange comforts the land. Boots, scarves and warm sweaters, we can’t forget haunted hayrides and apple ciders. So dig out the raincoat and grab the rake, or maybe grab a warm blanket and head to the lake. Halloween, oh yes Halloween is approaching fast, all the children in their varieties of costumes so vast. We could get lost in a cornfield or even pick a pumpkin, or even make a scarecrow, now that’s somethin’. We could jump in a big pile of leaves and lay there until Thanksgiving feast; Autumn is my favorite season to say the least.

Lenape Valley Foundation Mobile Crisis

Lenape Valley Foundation (LVF) is proud to announce the expansion of crisis services, with the addition of Mobile Crisis Services for all residents of Bucks County.

Mobile Crisis Services are available for all Bucks County residents over the age of 18 requiring crisis services, where circumstances indicate that the crisis episode may best be managed by sending a crisis worker to the person’s location rather than asking them to come to the site-based crisis service. Special populations include, but are not limited to: individuals with co-occurring disorders, intellectual disabilities, elderly, mental illness, veterans and those involved in the criminal justice system. Mobile Crisis Workers provide crisis intervention, assessment, counseling, resolution, referral, follow-up, and education to individuals receiving services, as well as to family members and community members. Mobile Crisis Workers meet people in need, family and community members at locations conducive to efficient and effective outcomes, such as homes, streets, or other community settings. Mobile Crisis will follow a person until he/she is actively involved with crisis services and/or treatment and will provide outreach follow-up to assure the person is engaged in appropriate post-crisis services. Peer services are offered by the peer specialist embedded in LVF’s Lower Bucks Crisis Center.

Mobile Crisis Intervention Services are available Monday through Friday, 9a.m. to 9p.m.

If you would like more information about Lenape Valley Foundation’s Mobile Crisis Service please call 215-785-9765.

The Seventh Annual Greater Philadelphia NAMIWalks Changing Minds…One Step at a Time!, a fundraising and awareness-raising event, is scheduled for Saturday, May 3, 2014 at Montgomery County Community College in Blue Bell. Last year’s walk raised $98,000.00 for programs, advocacy, and social outreach to be used in our communities. Bucks County raised over $16,000.00 for Bucks Counties programs. We also had 34 sponsors that supported the walk with generous donations of time and money. The walk gathered over 1000 walkers in support of NAMI.

Although the Walk Webpage is not yet ready to register teams, it is a good time to start thinking about forming your own team or joining our Bucks for Brains Team or signing up to walk as an individual walker.

The Greater Philadelphia NAMI Affiliates are comprised of the following counties who work to further the national organization’s goals in our region: NAMI PA-Bucks County; NAMI PA-Delaware County; NAMI PA-Philadelphia, Mainline and NAMI PA-Montgomery County.

MONDAY, Aug. 12 (HealthDay News) -- Stomach pain is a common childhood complaint, and now a new study suggests it may place some kids at higher risk for anxiety disorders or depression as adults.

The researchers compared 332 young adults, aged around 20, who had abdominal pain as children to 147 participants who did not. Of those who had suffered from stomach pain, 51 percent had an anxiety disorder during their lifetime, and 30 percent had one currently. By contrast, only 20 percent of adults without stomach pain as children had an anxiety disorder.

"A decade later, individuals who had stomach pain continued to have high rates of anxiety disorders, even if they no longer had stomach pain," said study author Lynn Walker, a professor of pediatrics at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn.

Moreover, 40 percent of young men and women who had abdominal pain as children had depression during their lifetime, compared with 16 percent of adults who didn't have stomach pain, according to the study, which was published online Aug. 12 and in the September print issue of the journal Pediatrics.

Exactly how stomach pain and anxiety are linked is not entirely clear, but "anxiety related to the pain, or even anxiety related to other things in the child's life, can exacerbate the pain and lead to increased suffering and disability," Walker said.

To break the cycle early, parents of children who complain of stomach pain should first take their child to the doctor to see if anything is going on medically, she said.

"If no significant disease is found, parents should encourage their children to continue their regular activities even if they are having pain or anticipate that they might have pain," Walker said. "When children stay home from school and other activities, they get behind in schoolwork and peer relationships, which increases stress, which in turn increases their suffering."

It spirals from there. "As they discontinue activities and isolate themselves socially, they have more time to focus on the pain and worry about it," she said. "As they fall behind their peers, they have additional things to worry about."

In the study, social anxiety disorder -- a paralyzing fear of being judged by others -- occurred among a quarter of children with stomach pain.

Experts agreed that parents should seek help early for kids with recurrent stomach pain to try to reduce the risk of anxiety and depression.

"Parents should take an active role in their child's life by seeking both medical attention and supportive counseling for their child. This will prevent potential worsening of anxiety, and will help children learn better ways of coping with stressors that may exacerbate their pain," said Dr. Scott Krakower, a child and adolescent psychiatrist at Zucker Hillside Hospital in Glen Oaks, N.Y.

Parents should take chronic stomach pain seriously from the get-go, said Dr. Sarah Rebstock, director of the Pediatric Pain Medicine Outpatient Clinic at Children's National Medical Center in Washington, D.C. "Get referred early if your child has two weeks or longer of stomach pain," she said. "Don't wait."

Although the study tied childhood stomach problems to adult anxiety and depression, it didn't establish a cause-and-effect relationship.

Dr. Mark Lowenheim, a pediatric gastroenterologist at St. Charles Hospital in Port Jefferson, N.Y., was quick to caution that not every child who has abdominal complaints will need to see a mental-health professional.

"Certainly there is a subset of children who have abdominal pain who also have anxiety and depression, so it's not a surprise that they also have a higher incidence of anxiety and depression as adults, but this is not a given," he said.
Surviving the Holidays When You Have a Mental Illness

Sarah K. Ravin, Ph.D.,
Licensed Psychologist
www.drsarahravin.com

For most people, the holidays are a time of joy and celebration. However, for many people with mental illnesses, the yuletide cheer is accompanied by added challenges. This is true for those with various diagnoses. Consider the following:

1. For people with depression, the joy and festivities of the holiday season seem to amplify their own inability to experience pleasure. As families and friends come together, they may withdraw. To make matters worse, Christmas falls right around the shortest day of the year, so the lack of sunlight can be a huge trigger for those with Seasonal Affective Disorder (SAD) – a type of depression which occurs in the fall and winter months.

2. For people with anxiety, being around large groups of unfamiliar people can be terrifying. Christmas parties, crowded shopping malls, even visits with unfamiliar (or unkind) relatives can be extra-stressful.

3. For people with anorexia nervosa or bulimia nervosa, the large amounts of food, particularly “treats,” that are part and parcel of holiday events can induce major anxiety. So can the enormously triggering “diet talk” that often accompanies holiday feasts and intensifies near New Years.

4. For people with alcoholism, the endless parade of holiday parties and events where alcohol is present makes it difficult to socialize normally or enjoy the typical gatherings with family and friends.

5. For people with ADHD, there is the added stress of final exams, Christmas shopping, decorating, parties, and visiting relatives, which can make them feel more scattered and disorganized than usual.

So how do you cope with mental illness during the holiday season? Here are some tips which may be helpful, regardless of your particular diagnosis:

1.) Plan ahead. Create a written list of potential problems that could arise around the holidays. Think about various ways that you could handle these situations, and write down your solutions. Visualize yourself handling these difficult situations with grace and strength.

2.) Enlist social support. Talk to people you trust – your therapist, family members, or friends – about your concerns. Let them know how they can help you through this difficult time. People are more than willing to be more generous and charitable than usual at this time of year!

3.) Maintain good health habits. Get at least 8 hours of sleep per night, eat plenty of healthful foods, exercise regularly, and drink in moderation (if at all). Many people stop engaging in health-promoting behaviors around the holidays. If you struggle with a mental illness, this is the time to be extra-conscientious about caring for your physical and mental health.

4.) Focus on the protective factors associated with Christmas. Despite the myth that rates of suicides increase around the holidays, scientific research actually shows that suicide rates are lower than average in the days before Christmas. This may be due to several issues:
• Increased support from family and friends who tend to gather together around the holidays
• Increased sense of charity and goodwill from others
• More community support – shelters, food banks, charities for the poor
• For many people, Christmas is associated with positive memories of hope and love and family, which can help improve outlook when things seem bleak
• Increase in religious observance and spirituality associated with Christmas

5.) Lower your expectations. Yes, the holidays are seen by many as “the most wonderful time of the year,” as the song goes. But stress and personal problems do not magically disappear during the holidays. It is not realistic to assume that you will be symptom-free simply because it is a holiday.

6.) Keep it simple. The holidays have become so commercialized, and so many demands are placed on people to throw and attend parties, buy and wrap lavish gifts, and cook like Julia Child on steroids, that many people are simply burnt out by the time Christmas arrives. Retailers love to extend the holiday season from Thanksgiving through New Years, but this is mostly for their own profit, and it doesn’t have to be this way. If you feel overwhelmed by stress, simply have a quiet, one-evening celebration with a few people of your choosing who are closest to you. There is no need to spend precious time and money getting people the perfect gifts. A simple card with a thoughtful note is sufficient to let people know you are thinking of them.

7.) Focus on what really matters. Remember the people of Whoville in The Grinch Who Stole Christmas? They showed us that Christmas can be joyful without presents and trees and decorations. These material things have no bearing on our ability to enjoy the holidays.

8.) In keeping with the Dr. Seuss example, think of your mental illness as the Grinch. It is a cold-hearted thief, with a heart three sizes too small, who will attempt to ruin your holiday. Don’t let it.

9.) Remember that parties are supposed to be fun and ARE ALWAYS OPTIONAL. You always dread your annual office party? Just don’t go. Let whomever is in charge know that you aren’t feeling well, or simply that you appreciate the invitation but you won’t be able to make it this year. It’s supposed to be a party, not a punishment.

10.) Do what’s fun; skip what’s not. If you love preparing Christmas dinner for your family, great! Enjoy! If not, hit up your local Chinese restaurant. Jews have had this tradition for decades.
