Our Mission

To improve the lives of the citizens of Bucks County who suffer from a serious mental illness or, as family members and caregivers, share the burden of these devastating illnesses.

Our mission is accomplished through programs designed to support, educate and advocate for individuals with a mental illness and their family members. We strive to educate the public about the true nature of mental illnesses and combat the stigma and discrimination often faced by people with these serious brain disorders.

Our programs educate individuals with mental illness to better understand their illness, stressors, and how to live in recovery. We help families to understand and be supportive of loved ones with mental illness. We also advocate for training of teachers, law enforcement, and first responders to recognize and respond appropriately to individuals with mental illness.

Negotiating the Housing Maze,
Thursday, February 21, 2013 at 7:30 P.M.

Christine Shannon,
Mental Health Residential Program Director and Lisa Kauffman Administrative Case Manager at Penn Foundation

Please join us for our February 21, 2013 Forum. Christine Shannon, Mental Health Residential Program Director at Penn Foundation, Member of the Bucks County MH/DP Advisory Board, Co-chair of the Bucks County Local Housing Options Team, Member of the Bucks County Homeless Continuum of Care and Lisa Kauffman, Administrative Case Manager at Penn Foundation will discuss negotiating the housing maze.

In the summer of 2011 Penn Foundation re-located its housing from rented apartments into new housing, Penn Villa, which is a low income housing tax credit project with multiple funders which required years of development work.

Chris will discuss the incredible complexity of housing and how to understand different kinds of housing and their application processes within Bucks County. This will involve discussing housing within and outside of the mental health system, as well as the kinds of supports that help people maintain housing.

The Four Seasons
By Cheryl Brenner

Winter It was a sunny day but the snow was on the ground and streets and sidewalks. I took my walk anyway. It was so beautiful with the sun shining on the snow. So beautiful on a February afternoon.

Spring erupts quietly making for more beautiful days. Sun nice and bright. Trees are budding in full all on them. The weather outside nice and bright from the beautiful sun on a beautiful April Day.

Summer It keeps getting better and better. Sun shine, people gathering down the shore, seeing beautiful flowers, beautiful lawns, kids playing in the parts and their yards, walking barefoot, swimming and just having a wonderful summer all on a summer day.

Now it’s Fall animals hibernate, tree leaves fall making them bare. It rains, we have tornados. But we all share four seasons.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10, 2013 --
Michael J. Fitzpatrick, executive director of the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) met yesterday with Vice President Joseph Biden’s task force on gun control, along with other leaders of the mental health community, urging action to strengthen and expand mental health care services.
U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) Katherine Sebelius and Attorney General Eric Holder presided over the meeting.
"The meeting was not about guns," Fitzpatrick said. "It was a listening session about fundamental mental health care services. President Obama’s leadership and Congressional action are needed to do what’s right."
"We need the President to step forward and engage in a national dialogue on mental illness and the mental health care system."
NAMI emphasized four points in the meeting:
- We must invest upstream rather than downstream in the mental health system by developing early identification and intervention strategies and access to treatment and support. Too many families wait years to get the treatment they need. The current system is impossible for many to navigate.
- Change happens through communities. We must provide training to school personnel, law enforcement, families and others in communities at every level on how to identify and respond to youth and adults experiencing mental health crises.
- Many of our nation’s schools are not addressing the needs of children who struggle with mental health conditions. We need to implement and coordinate school-based mental health services and supports. With them, many of these children can stay in school and have promising futures.
- Besides the stigma that surrounds mental illness the other major deterrent to people seeking help when they need it is lack of health insurance coverage. We must fully implement key provisions of the Affordable Care Act, including mental health and addictions parity requirements and efforts to increase a qualified mental health workforce.
"The Task Force’s recommendation must include mental health care," Fitzpatrick said. "No one solution can eliminate violence in America, but saving lives includes saving the lives of individuals and family members who struggle with mental illness every day."
"Treatment works—if a person can get it."
"The nation’s common concern must be to prevent tragedies before they happen, no matter who is involved."
"We must have a national dialogue that builds systems of care that provide treatment and support to people who need it, when they need it."

NAMI provides support and advocacy for mentally ill, families

The Intelligencer  By Theresa Hegel Staff writer January 2, 2013

For Lynn Plewes of Warminster, one of the hardest parts of caring for her three special-needs children was the isolation she felt. Years ago, one of her daughters was diagnosed with childhood-onset schizophrenia and obsessive-compulsive disorder and was receiving psychiatric care by the age of 2. Another daughter has autism and intellectual disabilities, and her son struggles with learning disabilities. “When you have a child with a mental health disorder, everyone seems to disappear,” Plewes said. “A lot of times, you’re told in a roundabout way that you’re not a good parent, that it’s your fault that your child is behaving this way.”

Plewes began an exhaustive search for someone who shared her experience. She tapped a network for parents of children with special needs, but the closest family she could find lived at the other end of the state. Then, when she was almost ready to give up, she struck up a conversation with a new friend, who happened to know someone whose child also had childhood-onset schizophrenia. That someone was Debbie Moritz, now the administrator of the Bucks County chapter of the National Alliance on Mental Illness. Moritz became a friend to Plewes, introducing her to the camaraderie available at NAMI. “She’s an angel,” Plewes said of Moritz. “She literally takes phone calls 12 hours a day, seven days a week, if needed. She’s always there and always such an inspiration to me.”

NAMI Bucks, which has about 200 members, provides support and advocacy for people recovering from mental illness and their families. There are more people affected by mental illness than you may think. NAMI estimates that one out of 17 people has a severe and persistent mental illness and that half of those people show symptoms by age 14. NAMI educates families and schools about the early warning signs and symptoms of these biological brain disorders and how to get effective treatment through free education classes and support groups, according to Moritz.

NAMI Bucks is one of 10 exceptional charities the newspaper is highlighting in its Do Gooder series for the good deeds they perform daily for area residents, like Lynn Plewes. Plewes said NAMI’s support has been invaluable over the last decade and a half, as she has struggled to raise her children in a world that still stigmatizes mental illness. “It’s almost like a family to me,” she said of NAMI. “Nobody outside really quite gets it. It’s one of those things you have to live through. ... It’s nice to know that there’s someone out there who has gone through the same thing and can give you little, helpful hints and that sort of thing.”

The organization is mostly volunteer, and Plewes herself now teaches one of NAMI’s free classes, helping families with young children and adolescents diagnosed with mental illness. NAMI Bucks offers a variety of classes, all taught by family members and people living in recovery, Moritz said. “We feel very strongly about that,” she said. “It’s not that we’re trying to replace professionals. ... We couldn’t replace them.” But, as Plewes said, families and people in recovery have a perspective that others may lack.

Besides running support groups and classes, NAMI provides 40-hour crisis intervention training for police officers, teaching them how to handle a mental health crisis in a way that keeps the ill person, the police officer and the community safe, Moritz said. NAMI hosts public forums five times a year, inviting doctors and others to speak about mental health issues. And the group runs an annual fundraising walk to raise money and awareness. This month, the alliance will begin teaching 50-minute health classes at area schools. They are designed to help students understand what their mentally ill peers undergo and to help them understand what such a person needs from a friend, Moritz said. “The bottom line is they just need someone to be a friend, just like anybody else,” she said.

Six times a year, NAMI runs something called the Lower Bucks Consumer Club, which Moritz describes as a Sunday dinner that’s just about socializing and fun, not therapy or programming. “A lot of these people are in programming all week,” she said. By the weekend, “they don’t want to hear it anymore.”

Moritz said she runs NAMI because she doesn’t want to see other families founder in the system the way she and Plewes did years ago. Moritz has two grown children, one of whom was diagnosed with schizophrenia at 12. Now 31, he’s married, has a job and is living “a life just like everybody else.” But when her son was younger, Moritz struggled with the same isolation and confusion about where to go for help that Plewes did. “I just don’t want to see other families go through feeling like they’re alone, because they’re not,” Moritz said.
